Marketing happens when someone decides to satisfy their wants and needs through an exchange. Exchange is the core concept of marketing, then the transaction is one of marketing in measuring. Transactions are formed from the exchange of values carried out by two or more people. Transaction marketing is one part of the concept of relationship marketing. Relationship marketing is a process for creating, maintaining, and expanding a relationship that is valuable with existing stakeholders. Through relationship marketing, marketers want to build strong social and economic conditions by promising and constantly delivering the highest quality products. Marketing evolved from simply maximizing the economic benefits of each transaction for the product seller to an equal and mutually beneficial relationship between the customer and the producer [8]. The promotion has a key role in determining market profitability and success and is one of the "Four P" keys of the marketing mix. Tools that can be used in the promotion mix include advertising; direct marketing; sales promotion; public relations and publicity; private sales and sponsors [11]. Social media is one type of online media accelerating communication like conversations in contrast with conventional media which does not allow readers to participate in the creation of contents [12]. Developments in the technologies, as well as a reduction in costs, will mean that the formation will be available to consumers. This results in the next level of transparency of dealings between businesses and their customers [13].
